IN MERRY ENGLAND

Mrs. Jessie Little Gives an Interesting Account of London and Paris and Continental Europe.

Tuesday, May 8, 1900.

I thought I would send a continuation of our trip which might be of some interest to our American friends. We took the 8:48 train at Norwich for London; made one stop at Ipswich and arrived at Liverpool street station in London about 11:30, and landed in the turmoil of the great city, which much to our surprise, contains no street cars. So we took a Chelsea bus out to our longings near Battersea Park. We were very well pleased with our accommodations. We took a stroll out to the park which is a very large and beautiful place on the Thames near Albert bridge, then took a road car and made a detour around to London bridge which we walked over and thought of the old school game, "London bridge is falling down," then took a bus home around the other way in the evening. We went to Kensington gardens and went through or partially through the Victoria and Albert museum, an immense building containing rare collections from all parts of the world. The next day, true to London, it was cloudy and rainy so we planned indoor work, taking a bus for Westminster Abbey where we put in a most interesting day. We were there during two services and heard the grand old pipe organ, having 4,400 pipes extending from way down in the basement far up in the vaulted roof. We also visited the Royal Crypt where lie many of the ancient kings and queens; also came across a marble slab in the floor sacred to the memory of Thomas Parr, 152 years of age when he died. We also viewed the poets' corner and other tombs wonderful in construction and age. It is a grand old building worn by the tramp of many tourists' feet. We also went to the aquarium and dog show and saw some wonderful trapeze performances. Next morning it was raining again, but we shouldered umbrella and mackintosh and started for Constitution Hill bent on seeing the queen.
We shivered around in the mud and mist for a couple of hours with the crowd, our eyes on the large arch spanning the road to Buckingham Palace, and at last saw the nodding plumes and shining helmets of the guard mounted on beautiful horses, also some mounted soldiers of India in native dress. The queen rode in an open carriage drawn by four horses, the off leader being ridden by a richly uniformed guard. The queen was bowing right and left to the crowd. She is a very small little lady, but has a good, noble face. She was accompanied by some of her daughters.
Then we went to Paddington station and took a train for Windsor Castle. This is a beautiful rambling old castle composed of additions of many styles of architecture added by many rulers. We could not enter the castle as H. R. H. was in residence, but we went through St. George's chapel and walked around the north terrace. We also visited Eton college and the barracks, and took an evening train back and went to Earl's Court to the woman's exhibition, a massive world's fair. Next day we visited Regents park and the Zoological gardens, having nearly the largest collection of animals in the world of all descriptions and in their natural conditions with plenty of room for exercise. Took a snap shot of some baby yaks, one snow white the other coal black who showed their appreciation by elevating their tails and racing madly around in great glee. We then went over to Hyde park and Kensington gardens and visited the Albert monument, a huge structure occupying a block, also the Albert memorial hall. We again saw the queen riding on Hyde park corner with an immense mounted guard. In the evening we went to see Madame Tassand's waxworks which are wonderful and amusing. The next day we went through the houses of Parliament, one tower of which contains Big Ben, the monster bell. Next we went to the Tower of London, crossing tower bridge, a grand structure having two cross ways for pedestrians at a great height above the bridge. The tower of London contains many old and quaint curiosities among which is the block and axe upon which many royal heads were severed from their bodies, among the rest Anne Boleyn. We gathered a leaf from the tree over where the block used to stand. Then visited St. Paul's cathedral during service; saw Wellington's monument and many others; went up in the dome to the whispering gallery, put our ear to the wall and heard the history of the building whispered half way round the dome; also walked around the outside of the dome and viewed the city. We spent Sunday with some friends which we made acquaintance with in London and had Norfolk dumplings for dinner. In the evening they took us to the oratory. It is a Roman Catholic building finished in many kinds of beautiful marble.
Monday we visited the British museum which is too immense for description. We went to Kensington palace which we enjoyed very much as it was the queen's birthplace. We visited the room in which she was born and saw her childhood toys.

Tuesday we visited the Kensington Natural History building where there were a great collection of stuffed animals, among the most interesting were some mammoth wholes. That evening Sir George White returned from Ladysmith and there was an immense crowd out to see him. Wednesday morning we started for Paris. We arrived at Dover about 11 o'clock; met some Chicago people on the train bound the same way. The train went out on the pier to the boat and we went on board the Nord; took some coffee and sandwiches which made us all such as the sea was quite rough. We reached Calais in about an hour and saw a kind of desolate, sandy beach. About 1 o'clock we took the train for Paris. The country appeared kind of flat and sandy devoted to pasture and grapes and passed through Ronen and Amiens.
We reached Paris about 5 o'clock, took a cab and drove to the Oceanic. We were close by the exposition, so after supper we walked around its gates. Next day we learned to feel great sympathy for strangers in a strange land. We went for a walk and entered the exposition. After a hunt for a ticket, for upon going to the ticket office at entrance as in our country for a ticket, they sent us out in the street to a fakir to buy our ticket. Men, women and children deal in tickets all over the city.
Our experience and all other tourists' opinion, at least those we have heard expressed, point to the fact that all Americans will do well to wait until our next world's fair in our own country or else realize the fact that "a fool and his money parted," and did not receive any change either. In the first place it was in a very unfinished state and many people think it always will be. We think those who visited the White City will find very little to compete with it.
We tramped around listening to the rapid tongue work of the gay Parisians and made frantic endeavors to get directed to the American building, but no one seemed familiar with the sound of America, and in desperation we craned our necks to find the flag, and at last spied the British lion on his red hunting ground and made for it and landed in the Canadian building, and much to our joy heard our native tongue and found one of our own countrymen who gladly piloted us to the United States building which was partially finished.
After wandering through it we went outside and sank onto a chair to rest our weary limbs and watch the stars and stripes floating over the dome of the capital and dream of home, when we were brought back to earth by a nudge in the ribs and a vision of a hand bag surmounted by the vinegary visage of a female member of the committee who politely requested ten centimes for the use of the chair. After awhile we resumed our way and explored the Midway Plaisance, only to be assailed with vendors of different articles. Then we tramped through the broiling sun to the large buildings to be blocked every few rods with a rope or chain or scantling bearing a card no admittance or danger, until at last weary and disgusted and homesick we turned our backs on the long drawn out miles of the exposition buildings.
After many encounters with the hand bag female we decided to devote the rest of our time to the city of Paris itself, but before going to our hotel we went to the ticket office, after first paying two fares to get there, and bought tickets for Naples and engaged a carriage for morning. About 8 o'clock the porter announced our carriage ready and we seated ourselves in a very comfortable cab and started out and had a lovely day's drive, our guide speaking French and we English which made it edifying, but we got on very well by having him write instead of talk. We drove through the Place de Concorde taking snap shots of the exposition entrances, fountains, etc., in Concorde and to the Grand opera house, the arch in the Tuilleries, the church of Notre Dame, to the Arc de Triomphe, to the Louvre, paid six francs for a guide for two hours to explain the pictures and statuary. He was a good English speaking guide until the bargain was made, after that we had to guess at it and translate his information. Then we visited the Pantheon and St. Genevieve church and the Palace of the Luxembourg and the Jardin de Plant the largest and most beautiful park we ever saw, and from there through all the principle drives in Paris. We then went to our hotel and had supper then resumed our cab and drove to the Gare de Lyon, and after bidding farewell to our driver, the only genial and courteous Parisian we met, we took the train for Naples deciding that France is a beautiful country but the French decidedly French. The sun rose about 4 o'clock on our first day in beautiful Italy. We were passing through the Alps on the Mt Cenis route, through tunnels and on the verge of precipices, following the rapid Rhone for a long distance. We passed through Macon, Bourg, Aix la Bains, all very romantic looking places.

BY BERTHA N. CLAY

CHAPTER VI.—(Continued.)

"My darling," he said, "why have you promised to dance with that horrible man?"

"Terrible!" cried Violet. "Do you know how rich and how great he is, Felix?"

"That makes him even more horrible—it is so many magnificent gifts wasted. You must not dance with him, Violet, but with me. You are mine—you belong to me. I cannot let you go to him even for one dance—even for five minutes."

"I must dance with him now that I have promised, Felix."

"I do not think that I shall be able to endure it, Violet. I am afraid if I see his hand touching you I shall strike it aside."

She laughs as a child laughs who points a loaded gun for mischief, never dreaming that it may cause sudden death.

"I feel that I ought to dance that quadrille with you, Felix," she said, "but really I did not know how to refuse. I was quite embarrassed—you must have seen it. How jealous all the other girls will be! How Lady Rolfe will watch me. She said the other day that her daughter, that insipid-looking girl, was far more beautiful than I. She is not, is she, Felix?"

"My darling, you are more beautiful than any one else," he said. "Violet, you must dance this quadrille with Sir Owen, I suppose?"

"Yes, I must, indeed," she replied.

"It drives me half mad to think of it, Violet."

"Here comes Sir Owen," said Violet, cutting short the passionate words. "I shall not be long away from you, Felix," and, laying her white hand on Sir Owen's arm, they went away together.

CHAPTER VII.

There was no place in England prettier than the old parish church at Lifford. Sunday in Lifford was a day that would have charmed a poet. The very spirit of peace and rest seemed to brood over the earth, while the sweet chime of the Sabbath bells sounded through the venerable oaks.

So long as he could remember, Felix had always walked home with Violet from church, when they were children, they ran down the hills in very gladness of heart, but now they walked sedately, Felix almost forgetting the beauty of the fair world around him, as he looked into the beautiful face of the young girl by his side.

It would hardly have seemed like Sunday to Felix if this privilege had been withdrawn. He went, as usual, on the first Sunday in June, when the old church was looking its fairest, and the sunlight on the oak trees was wonderful to see. There was Violet, her beautiful face shining, he thought, like the face of an angel; there was Evelyn, looking like a fair, meek saint. Great was his surprise to see Sir Owen Cherevich also. It was the first time that he had made his appearance at church, and the congregation was just a little excited about it. Dr. Hunter, on seeing him there, fondly fancied that it was due to the fame of his effective preaching. Lady Rolfe suspected that the charming Lavinia had lured him there, but the vicar's wife, shrewd Mrs. Hunter, sighed and smiled.

"It is the old, old story," she said to herself; and then she reproached herself for the thought and applied herself to the Psalms.

Felix did not think much about the matter. He was not ashamed to bow his handsome head, and join with all his heart in the beautiful words of the service, but when it was all over he hastened to meet Violet. She was standing with her mother, and to his surprise, Sir Owen Cherevich was talking to them. He gave a careless nod to Felix, but continued talking.

"I beg that you will let me drive you home, Mrs. Haye," he was saying. "To tell the truth, I ordered my carriage on purpose—I did, indeed. It is a lovely morning, and, if you will permit it, we will drive round by Queen's Ash."

He did not look at Violet as he spoke. He knew that whatever her mother said she must do. Felix had taken her hand. He did not care if all the world heard what he had to say.

"You will not break through the old custom of walking home with me, Violet, or, rather of allowing me to walk home with you?"

She looked from one to the other with real distress in her face. Sir Owen did not even glance at her; he knew that his cause was safe in Mrs. Haye's hands.

"Violet," said Felix, "you cannot hesitate," and the girl stood looking at him while her mother said:

"Really I do not know what answer to give you, Sir Owen. I do not know what people will say."

"Why, what does that matter, Mrs. Haye?"

"Well, you see, Sir Owen, Lifford is a small place, and 'everybody' knows 'everything.'"

"My dear lady, what can it matter if all the world knows of this? I shall be very proud of the honor, I assure you. Lady Rolfe would not require so much urging."

The last words, vulgar as was the spirit which dictated them, quite determined Mrs. Haye. Evidently, if she did not go with him, he would drive Lady Rolfe and her daughter. She simpered a little.

"Since you are so kind, we will accept your offer," she said. "It will certainly be very pleasant, I always tell Mr. Haye that the one thing I want to make me perfectly happy is a carriage. Now, Violet."

"Violet will allow me to escort her, Mrs. Haye," suggested Felix.

"Oh, no," replied Mrs. Haye. "Violet must come with me! I cannot go alone and leave Violet with you. Another thing, Felix, you shall be her escort. Sir Owen has been kind enough to order his carriage for us; it would be really impolite to refuse. We will say good-morning to you now." And she watched him while he shook hands, first with her and then with Violet.

His handsome young face had grown white even to the lips; but what could he do? He was a gentleman; he could not make a "scene"; he could not take the girl from her mother's side against her will; he had no carriage with roan steeds, and coachmen and footmen in livery. What could he do? Only one thing. If Violet was to go in the carriage, he himself would put her into it.

So he walked by her side down the avenue of limes and they reached the high road where the carriage stood. There were many curious eyes watching them. Lady Rolfe and the fair Lavinia looked on in angry indignation.

"What does that girl mean by encouraging Sir Owen?" said the mother. "Surely one lover ought to be enough for her."

When Felix had helped Violet into the carriage, he bent over her to arrange her dress.

"Darling, you would sooner have walked home with me, would you not?"

"Yes, I would," she replied; and after that the disappointment was not quite so hard to bear. He had one satisfaction; he turned away without a word or a bow to Sir Owen.

"This is pleasant," said Mrs. Haye, as the carriage rolled swiftly along the high road. "Violet, of all the luxuries of life, give me a carriage."

The luxury and grandeur were certainly very pleasant, while the novelty delighted Violet.

Sir Owen did nothing to alarm her. He talked to Mrs. Haye, while he merely looked at Violet. He was wonderfully solicitous that she should be comfortable, and there was but one drawback to Violet's pleasure, the memory of the pain on her lover's face.

"How I wish Felix had a carriage!" she said to herself. "But that will never be."

She enjoyed her father's surprise when the horses stopped at The Limes, and she wondered what her mother meant when she said:

"If I had a chance of keeping such a carriage as that I should not lightly throw it away."

CHAPTER VIII.

Sir Owen had sent out invitations for a great fete, and Mrs. Haye declared that it was fortunate rain fell two days before. It cleared the air, it freshened the grass, it washed the dust from the trees and hedges, and it made the whole face of nature so sweet, so fresh and fair, that it was a pleasure to breathe. The air was odorless with the scent of flowers and of green leaves.

Sir Owen in his sumptuously appointed carriage drove up to The Limes. Nothing could have exceeded his kindness—he was so attentive to Francis Haye, so kind to Mrs. Haye, so deferential to Violet. Again she felt how pleasant it was. She saw deep satisfaction on her father's face, great pride on her mother's. She was young and heedless, and on such an exquisite June day how could she help feeling bright and happy? Moreover, she held something in her hand which gladdened her heart. Just as she was starting, while Sir Owen stood waiting for her, a messenger came with a note from Felix:

"My Darling Violet! I send a few words to greet you as you are starting, and to wish you a very pleasant, happy visit. You will not forget me? You will say to yourself over and over again that you are pledged to me? I trust you implicitly. You love me, and I am content."

How he loved her! She repeated it again and again. How he loved her! The little note pleased her. She drove away, with Sir Owen whispering all kinds of compliments to her; but her lover's face was before her eyes and his words were in her heart. They drove through the magnificent park, with its herd of antelope deer, through the superb grounds, to the grand entrance, and then Violet looked up in wonder.

The afternoon sun fell full upon the grand old building, showing the towers and turrets, the deep old windows, the Venetian balconies, hanging out the picturesque outlines of the noble edifice. She hardly knew that such splendor could be; unconsciously she crushed her lover's little note in her hand as she beheld the treasures on the walls.

She passed through long, broad corridors, where white marble statues gleamed from among pyramids of choice flowers; she gazed on glorious pictures and picturesque fountains; and all the time Sir Owen walked by her side whispering sweet, complimentary compliments to her, and they were so startled by her striking beauty that they were more than civil to her. Sir Owen almost followed her into the room. How his eyes brightened as he saw her!

"For a girl like that to marry a country solicitor, to hide such beauty as hers in a place like Lifford, is simply madness," he said to himself. "She will thank me in later years for saving her from such a fate."

Then he went up to her, and, scarcely letting her all the evening. It was against the laws of etiquette for him to take her down to dinner; but Lady Rolfe accepted his apology with a smile. The astute lady had explained the motives of her policy to Lavinia.

"I understand Sir Owen," she said. "If anyone opposes him he will lose his reason over the girl. Place no obstacle in the way of his admiration, and he will soon tire of her. He cannot marry her, for she is engaged to Felix Lonsdale."

So, with great amiability, Lady Rolfe had accepted Sir Owen's invitation to act as hostess for three or four days. She had determined that she would give him every opportunity of being with Violet, on the principle that the more he saw of her the sooner he would tire of her.

The next morning was bright and warm. There was a hurried breakfast—everyone seemed to have so much to do; from early dawn men had been at work in the park. Sir Owen came downstairs radiant.

"Who will say one word against English weather after this?" he cried; then, when he saw Violet, he bowed low to her. "The queen of the fete," he whispered, and she blushed as she heard him.

The post-bag came as they sat at breakfast, and there was a note for her; she saw that it was from Felix, and put it aside until she should be alone. Looking up suddenly she saw Sir Owen watching her intently, and again a hot flush burned her face. He did not leave her—everything was referred to her; her wishes, her tastes were continually consulted.

"My dear Lavinia," said Lady Rolfe, with upraised hands, "it is something incredible—he treats her just as though she were the mistress of this house. It is quite enough to turn any girl's brain."

Though he spent his whole time with her, Sir Owen did not forget her parents. Francis Haye declared that he was "in clover"; his wife had never been so happy; they were waited upon and attended to before everyone else—they had every luxury, every attention.

The guests arrived early. Everything was a success, but the crowning satisfaction of all was that the weather was so fine. Violet found time to read her lover's note; it said how disappointed he was that he could not come to Garwood; but to attend the fete, even for one hour, was an impossibility for him. His father had had a very serious relapse, and he could not leave the office. She was sorry; yet she could not understand how it was she experienced a certain feeling of relief—her perfect triumph was so great, and she enjoyed it so thoroughly. It must all have ended when Felix came.

It was a brilliant fete; she had seen nothing like it in her life. The fete at the vicarage, which had always seemed to her the very acme of aristocratic gaiety, dwindled into insignificance. The sun had seldom shone on a more brilliant scene; flags and banners waved from the tall trees; there were numerous evergreen arches, marquees, and an infinity of amusements. The music from the bands echoed through the park.

"It is very beautiful," said Violet, as she stood with Sir Owen watching the various groups.

"If you are pleased I am well repaid," he said. "Do you not know that I would give all I have to please you? I would do all this over and over again to win one smile from you."

Suddenly, standing there, she remembered a promise to Felix; that she would tell Sir Owen she was to be his wife. How was she to do it? She could not turn round to him abruptly and say: "I am going to marry Felix Lonsdale."

She was tempted to do so, but it would be too brusque. "I shall find an opportunity during the evening," she thought. "I can easily make one, but not at present. I will enjoy myself now."

He led her to the summit of the hill—to a rustic seat under the larches.

"I was thinking all last night," he said, "that I would bring you here today. I want you to look well around you. See how the sun shines on Garwood! Look at the Hall first."

It was a magnificent panorama that was spread out before her. Not the least important feature in it was the grand old Hall, with its towers and turrets. He stood by her side.

"It is a noble property," she said.

"Yes, there is not a larger or better estate in England, and the beauty of it is that it is all together. I am lord of the soil," he said, "for many miles round. I know no other place so fine as Garwood. Violet Haye, all this is mine; and, if you will speak only one word, it shall all be yours."

She turned to him with a startled glance.

"I do not understand you," she declared. "How could it be mine?"

"It can all be yours if you will marry me, Violet," he whispered.

Her beautiful face grew pale as death. "I cannot marry you," she replied, quietly.

"Why not, Violet? Tell me why."

"Because I am engaged to marry Felix Lonsdale."

"Is that all? What on earth does that matter? He ought to be ashamed of himself to presume to ask such a girl as you to marry him; he must be mad to think you would."

"He loves me," she said, quietly.

"So do I—so do many others. You must not marry him, Violet; he has no money, no influence, no position; his father is under a cloud which must darken the son's future. You cannot marry him; it would be madness."

"I am engaged to him," she replied.

"As if that mattered! Engagements like yours are broken every day; it is the commonest thing in the world—no one thinks anything of it."

"Do you know, Sir Owen," she said, "that if I were false to Felix Lonsdale it would break his heart?"

Sir Owen laughed aloud.

"My dear Miss Haye, lawyers have no hearts. He might lose his temper; but men never break their hearts—a good cigar will cure the most desperate love affair. You amuse me."

"I hope you are speaking falsely," she said. "I hope men are better than you paint them."

"They are all very much alike, my dear Violet," he returned. "It is most refreshing to hear that you think any man capable of breaking his heart."

"Ah! but you do not know Felix Lonsdale. You do not know how he loves me!"

"I never wish to know Felix Lonsdale," he told her. "I have no partiality for men under a cloud. I know how much I love you, and that is more to the point."

She shrank from him with a pale, scared face. She did not like this discussion of her lover.

"You marry this man who is under a cloud," he went on. "He takes you to some wretched little home; he works day and night, yet can hardly get money enough for his expenses; you spend the prime of your life and lose the glory of your beauty in a helpless struggle to make both ends meet; and you die before your time, your beauty faded and gone, worn out—even in the prime of life. I say that it is a crying shame for such a marriage to take place. You see the difference, Violet?"

"Yes, I see it, Sir Owen; but—"

"Then," he interrupted, "we will not talk about it to-day. You shall think it well over; you will be of my opinion soon. Now we will go back again. The first moment I saw you I meant to win you, Violet. I swore to myself that you should be mine. You have promised me the first dance to-night, remember."

Violet looked exquisitely lovely when she was dressed for the ball. Admiring eyes followed her every movement. It was agreed that the beautiful girl in white and silver, with a crown of silver leaves, was certainly the belle par excellence.

She was so brilliant, so gay, so enchanting, that Sir Owen grew every moment more hopelessly in love with her. People could think what they liked about Violet, but there was no mistake as to him—not the least in the world; he was quite lost. He saw and thought of nothing but Violet. Everyone agreed that the ball was worthy of the fete. To Violet it was a long dream of homage; the most eligible men in the room surrounded her; she was besieged by would-be partners.

Sir Owen took Violet down to supper—a grand supper, which was in itself a wonder; and then they danced until the sun rose in the eastern sky.

Railroads in Asia.

The lines now in existence have a total length of about 30,000 miles, of which two-thirds belong to British India. The portions of the Trans-Caspian and Trans-Siberian railways already constructed have a length of 3,200 miles. A number of European syndicates have obtained concessions for 3,000 miles of railroads in China, which will traverse regions rich in minerals and agriculture; many of these lines are already in process of construction.

The Chinese Government owns about 300 miles of railway. The lines are very remunerative, especially that from Peking to Tien-Tsin. Japan is well provided with railroads, the present length being 3,200 miles. French Indo-China has at present only 120 miles, but the French possessions in Indo-China, Annam, and Tonkin will soon have 2,400 miles, which will greatly help to develop their mineral and agricultural resources.

The Dutch Indies are well supplied. Java alone has 1,000 miles. There are as yet no railroads in Persia of any consequence, but Turkey operates 1,500 miles in Asia, and 600 miles more are in construction or projected.—Consul General Richard Guenther.

Cipher Writing.

Among the clay tablets from the record chamber of the Assyrian kings, discovered by Sir Henry Layard, and dating from the eighth century B. C.—reproductions of which have recently been published by the British Museum—there are certain passages described as "written in unknown tongues," which may be a species of cipher, especially as it appears from other documents that "interpreters" were attached to the staff of this ancient library for the purpose of deciphering diplomatic communications. The Spartans are said, by La Gualletiere, to have invented cipher writing, it having been their practice, when sending out an officer of rank, to provide two wooden cylindrical staves, exactly alike, one of which the officer took with him, while the other they retained. When secret messages had to be sent, the home authorities wrapped a strip of parchment round their staff spirally, wrote their communication across the edges thus formed, unrolled the parchment and dispatched it. The recipient applied it in the same way to his staff, thus bringing the broken characters, otherwise unreadable, into proper sequence.

Boy's Spartan Courage.

Fifteen-year-old William Van Allman, while picking berries west of the city to-day, was nipped by a rattlesnake, which he failed to observe under a bush. The fangs of the reptile caught one of the boy's fingers near the end.

First killing the snake, the lad drew his pocketknife, and with Spartan courage, cut off the injured finger at the second joint. He bound the wound with his handkerchief and hastened to Altoona, where the injury was dressed. The physicians say he is in no danger.—Altoona (Pa.) Cor. Philadelphia Record.

His Meaning Clearer Than His Words.

To illustrate the fogfulness of phrase with which some people are afflicted, Dr. Crichton Browne told a little story recently. At the annual meeting of a charitable institution a subscriber complained that the work was unsatisfactory, and naturally annoyed the committee. One of the committeemen rose and replied: "Ladies and gentlemen, perhaps you think that one-half of the committee does the work, while the other half does nothing. Well, as a matter of fact, you are wrong. The reverse is the case."—London Chronicle.

The Maid and the Handkerchief.

A touching and poetical custom prevails in the Welsh-Tyrol, says the London News. When a young maiden is about to be married, immediately before she steps across the threshold of her old home, on her way to the church, her mother solemnly gives her a new pocket-handkerchief. The bride holds it in her hand throughout the marriage ceremony, using it to wipe away her tears. So soon as the marriage festivities are ended the young wife lays the handkerchief aside in her linen closet, and there it remains as long as she lives.

Nothing would induce a Tyrolean wife to use this sacred handkerchief. It may be half a century or longer before it is taken from its place to fulfill the second and last part of its mission. When the wife dies, perhaps a gray old grand-mother, the loving hands of the next of kin place the bridal handkerchief over the face of the dead and it is buried with her in the grave.

The Douglas Shoe.

The best advertised and consequently the best-known shoe in the world to-day is undoubtedly made by the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co. of Brockton, Mass. The one idea of this company has always been to sell a shoe for $3.50 which equals in every way the $5 shoes of any other concern. They are able to do this on account of there being no middle man's profit, as the goods are sold direct from the factory to the wearer. In sixty of the principal cities of the country they have their own retail stores. The goods are made in all sizes and widths, and few shoes equal them for style and durability.

The factory at Brockton employs over 1,100 hands, and all labor troubles are settled by the State Board of Arbitration. Nothing but union labor is employed, and pay about the best average wages of any shoe workers in the United States. The factory pay roll amounts to $17,435 per week. This company makes shoes for men only, and it is their proud boast that over one million men wear them.—Denver (Colo.) Post.

The oldest piece of wrought iron in existence is believed to be a roughly-fashioned sickle-blade found by Belzoni in Karnac, near Thebes. It was imbedded in mortar under the base of the Sphinx, and on that account is known as "the sickle of the Sphinx." It is now in the British Museum, and is believed to be nearly 4,000 years old.

Nebraska in Line for McKinley.

Hon. Thomas A. Healey, postmaster of Milford, Neb., passed through here on the train north to Silver Lake, on Saturday evening. Mr. Healey is sheriff of Kenosha county and a resident in childhood and young manhood of the town of Salem. He went to the war in 1862 as a member of Co. M. 1st Wis. cavalry. He was wounded and came home to Salem and was elected sheriff in 1866, and moved to Beward county, Nebraska, in 1869. Mr.
Healey had charge of a carload of excursionists from Nebraska to the G. A. R. encampment in Chicago. Among others were Thomas H. and Oscar Bishop, Geo.
Garland, John Prosser and wife, O. D.
Wicks and daughter, all old residents of the town of Salem, also Theo. Linderman an old resident of Burlington. Mr. Healey says that the 48 people who filled the car could not have raised money enough during the last democratic administration to have bought one ticket to Chicago. Now the train, of which his car was a part, consisted of two sections of eleven coaches each of well dressed, happy, contented and prosperous people all from Nebraska.
Nineteen-twentieths of the voters on that train will vote for President McKinley and continuation of prosperity. Mr. Healey returned to Chicago on Monday morning but hopes to be at the Old Settlers' meeting at Paddock's lake on Thursday.

A little further evidence of McKinley prosperity lies in the fact that the postoffice at Milford, Neb., (money order department) under last democratic administration showed a business of about $1100 per month, while it is at present time doing about $2300 per month. The only unfortunate matter connected with prosperous Nebraska at present lies in the fact that a few poor deluded individuals will still howl and shout for Bryan, and they are growing fewer every day. Nebraska has the biggest crop and the brightest prospects it ever had and the people are disposed to let well enough alone.

Barn and Contents Burned.

Last Friday night the barn and out-buildings on the Charles Heydecker farm near Hickory were burned to the ground, lightning being the cause. The farm was leased by Joseph Smith and the loss is considerable to him, he having just put in his hay, etc. No insurance on the stock. The buildings were insured for $500.

Bids for Hauling Supplies.

Notice is hereby given that sealed bids will be received for hauling supplies, butter and coal, to and from the Antioch Creamery Association factory, hauling to commence Sept. 1, 1900. For further information and conditions apply to secretary. Bids to close August 25, 1900, at 1 o'clock p. m. The association reserves the right to reject any and all bids.
By order of the Board of Directors.

WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, August 27, 1900.

President McKinley has notified the governments of the several nations which acted as our allies in China that the United States has accomplished the purpose for which it sent troops to Peking—rescued its minister and other American citizens who were in peril—and respectfully asked them to state their future intentions toward China. And as a hint of what he thinks they ought to do, he has caused it to be officially announced that no more American troops will be sent to China unless conditions change.
That is diplomacy in plain English—and it is up to the allied powers to answer as plainly. In order that there may be no delay in dealing with their reply, the president has given up his visit to the G.
A. R. encampment at Chicago, which he had been looking forward to with pleasure for months. It is strongly suspected that several of the governments concerned will not give satisfactory answers.

Speaking of the renewed democratic abuse of Senator Hanna, Mr. J. T. Atter-holt, of Connecticut, said: "They tried that four years ago without success, and it seems almost incredible that they should repeat the mistake. If it wouldn't win then, it hasn't a ghost of a show now. In 1896 Hanna was a new proposition to the vast majority of voters, and some of the stories they told about him were really terrifying. But during the past four years, the country has had a pretty good chance to become acquainted with the chairman of the republican national committee, and the people find much in him to admire.
Hanna is not a statesman. Even his warmest admirers do not credit him with being that, but those who know him well know him to be a brave and honest man, with marvelous executive ability. His honesty sometimes gets him into trouble.
He thinks a thing, and says it, without stopping to figure out what the effect will be. If a certain thing is so, Hanna cannot see the reason why all the world should not know it. In this he is far more honest than many men who pose as paragons of political virtue. He is entirely without frills or ornament but is possessed of many homely virtues."

In his annual report, Pension Commissioner Evans estimates that the law enacted at the last session of congress will add from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 to the annual payment of pensions, and expresses the opinion that the coming session of congress will enact new legislation that will largely add to the number of pensioners. There was a net increase of 2010 in the number of pensioners on the roll, which was 993, 529 on June 30 last, but a decrease in the total expenditures of the office of $3,417.
The report takes strong ground in favor of a reform in the rules for those who shall be allowed to practice as pension attorneys and says: "There is no reason why the reputation of the pension bar cannot be raised to as high a standard as that of any bar in the land."
Col. O. C. Sabin, who organized the Silver Knights of America in 1896, and edited their organ, has deserted Bryanism and come out for McKinley and Roosevelt.
He said of the present campaign: "As to this cry of imperialism, that is all balder-dash. It is not made with sincerity by the democrats themselves. Anybody who knows history knows that the republican party has never been in favor of those policies which have a tendency to uphold the country. The only question upon which I have ever differed with the republicans was the question of money, and I am satisfied that the results proved that the leaders of that party are right, and we who went for silver are wrong. It is a source of gratification and joy to me that thousands of old silver men are now coming out in favor of the republican party, and the standard of money which that party has established."

The navy department has awarded contracts for six Holland submarine torpedo boats, all to be delivered in eleven months.
These boats are to be stationed at Boston,
New York, Philadelphia, in Hampton Roads, San Francisco and Puget sound.
The price to be paid is $170,000 each.
In reply to questions as to whether Bryan, if elected, could put the government on a silver basis without legislation by congress, Secretary Gage said: "There is no doubt Mr. Bryan could order his secretary of the treasury to make payments in silver of all public debts payable in coin, and for all current disbursements of the government as well, which amounts to a million and a half to a million and three-quarter dollars a day. That he would give such an order too, is very certain, if he is in the same mind that he was in 1896, for he was then quoted as saying: 'If there is anyone who believes that the gold standard is a good thing, or that it must be maintained, I want him not to cast his vote for me, because I promise him it will not be maintained in the country longer than I am able to get rid of it.'"

THE WORKMAN'S CORNER.

This column will be devoted to the interests of the working man as outlined by our Waukegan correspondent.

A Wonderful People.

It may have been remarked in these columns before that the inhabitants of the United States are the most industrious and therefore the most successful people on earth. Hardly a hundred years ago the territory beyond the Mississippi river was little else than an unknown and unbroken wilderness. At this time the United States contains about six millions souls located principally along the Atlantic coast. With the exception of an occasional fort and trading post, the country west of Detroit, Mich., was an almost limitless tract of primeval solitude. Today this vast country is teeming with millions of industrious people who have spanned the continent with several lines of railways, built numerous large and substantial cities, some of them the wonder of the world; dug famous canals; built the largest manufactures and equipped them with marvels of machinery capable of turning out the greatest amount of the best products the earth produces.

One great and grievous fundamental mistake of omission or commission in the construction of their organic law, culminated in one of the greatest, bloodiest and costliest wars since the world began. They have maintained at great cost all systems of religious faith; established, equipped and conducted the most elaborate and comprehensive system of public education. Internal improvements, such as harbors and rivers; the construction of a new navy, dry docks, arsenals and public buildings at a cost, in the aggregate, simply immense.
Besides supporting a great and growing system of government that is costing the people a thousand millions per year.

Notwithstanding this great and progressive people, keenly alive to all human interests, finding time to sympathize with a down-trodden and ill-governed neighboring people; righteously took up their cause in the interests of humanity and by force of arms drove the cruel oppressor.
Pending these warlike preparations at home with an old and once powerful nation came the startling news, like a crashing clap of thunder from a clear sky, of the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila.

Dewey, from an obscure commander in the United States navy, became at once a world hero. No individual at this time, a little over two years since, whether republican or democrat, populist or what not,
but felt to the very center of his organism that it was one of the greatest feats of naval warfare that ever happened—and so it was. No one thought of imperialism.
But few knew anything of Manila bay or the Philippine islands, still less of their inhabitants. The country was wild with excitement over the glorious victory.
Enlistments in the army and navy were offered to the extent of ten times the number wanted.

William J. Bryan could not resist the enthusiasm and enrolled his name in the glorious cause. What for? As a patriot proud and simple? If so then what is the matter now? O, politics, I hear some one answer. Well, yes, more than likely. It is not the first time that political ambition has been tried and failed. It followed and nearly destroyed an unsuccessful general during the great civil war, as well as his party. The melancholy fact is not so old as to be forgotten. Happening, too, as it did after four years of bloody struggle for the nation's life—after a series of the most sanguinary battles of the war—of itself, most and discouraging to the very soldier at the front, but how much more discouraging was the fire-in-the-rear party who declared the war a failure? For political supremacy this same party is obstructing, again trying to gratify its insatiable ambition at any cost, no matter if it nullifies the glorious work of the army and navy, even to the everlasting disgrace of the nation which by their heroic efforts has forged to the front rank as a world power.
Oh shame! shame on them. Defeated four years ago on the "heaven born" issue which was going to do so much for a distressed people, suffering as they were the consequences of the ruinous policy of democratic rule, they again come before the people for the support with the same cry, hoping with the additional cry of imperialism, to gain a sufficient number of votes to succeed to power.

Imperialism and militarism. What a miserable misnomer to apply to a party which sustained the actions of the generals of the nation's armies when they granted terms of peace so generous that it not only astonished the rebels, but the world. The people are not to be fooled by any such treasonable talk; no more now than in 1864.
The republican party can be trusted to seldle the Philippine insurrection on righteous terms. They have been tried on more momentous questions of like character at home, and, but for the obstructing work of democrats would have been sooner and better done.

To the unbiased and impartial citizen the above synopsis of events and the hand that the democrat party has had in them does not warrant or call for any assistance from you on this occasion. The signal failure to perform or redeem any promise they made the people eight years ago, ought to be remembered by every voter when he steps into the poll booth to cast his vote.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know It.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. If it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too
frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also
convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Crops Damaged by Too Much Rain.

The recent storms have damaged crops in Lake county to such an extent that farmers are considerably alarmed. The terrific rains of last week have beaten the heads off grain in shock and has so thoroughly soaked it that much of it has begun to rot. Not only this, but in many cases the oats in shock, according to a farmer's statement, have begun to sprout again and green blades are springing up from the center of the shocks. There is some hope that the interior of the shocks is not damaged, but the damage to the outside is so great as to cause a loss of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Elliot, of the Elliot Stock farm, said he had over a thousand dollars worth of grain in shock and he didn't believe it was worth hauling in. Many similar remarks come from all parts of the county.

The storm of Friday night was most severe in Benton. The township was visited by a terrible hail storm. It raged some 15 minutes and riddled corn to an inestimable extent. Windows were broken in numerous farm houses. Numerous farmers report the damage to corn is such that the crop in Benton is practically ruined.

"I believe that the damage to crops of all kinds in Lake county caused by the recent rains is at least $150,000," said a well known farmer.—Waukegan Sun.

Killed While Drunk.

Though the evidence at the inquest did not show it, other evidence proves that George McGuire, who was killed at Grayslake last week, was badly intoxicated, to which fact the terrible accident was due.

Dr. Shaffer saw McGuire in the evening just prior to his going home. Seeing that he was under the influence of liquor the doctor, knowing the young man well, took him by the arm and tried to lead him to a place where he might be free from danger. The man refused and said he was going home and that he was all right. The doctor cautioned him, telling him that when he left for home to be sure and go down the road and not down the Wisconsin Central tracks. He promised to do so, but evidently did just the opposite, for where his body was found showed he must have been walking along the tracks.

The jury which sat on the case rendered a verdict of accidental death by being struck by a Wisconsin Central train.

J. J. Longabaugh said he had seen McGuire just prior to leaving for home and that the young man acted rather strangely, as though not feeling well. He was not positive that he was under the influence of liquor.

A Striking Contrast.

While South African soldiers have been facing cannons the servants of the astronomical observatory in another part of South Africa have been peacefully gazing through their telescopes and have discovered a little star of the eighth magnitude, which is the swiftest traveler that has yet been found among the stellar hosts.

"I had female trouble for eight years," writes Mrs. L. J. Dennis, of 828 East College St., Jacksonville, Ill. "Words cannot express what I suffered. I sought relief among the medical profession and found none. Friends urged me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. When I commenced taking this medicine I weighed ninety-five pounds. Now I weigh one hundred and fifty-six pounds—more than I ever weighed before. I was so bad I could lie from day to day and long for death to come and relieve my suffering. I had internal inflammation, a disagreeable drain, bearing down pain, and such distress every month but now I never have a pain—do all my own work and am a strong and healthy woman."

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. Correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

LITERARY NOTES.

The September number of McClure's Magazine will contain an elaborately illustrated article by Samuel Hopkins Adams on "The Training of Lions and Other Great Cats." The drawings, by Charles R. Knight, of the American Museum of Natural History, because of the artist's technical skill and scientific knowledge, are doubtless the most startling and life-like portraits of lions that have appeared in any magazine.

"A Bill from Tiffany's" will be the subject of the second of the "True Stories from the Under-World," by Josiah Flynt and Francis Walton. The hero is a New York detective, and the action centers round a metropolitan diamond robbery. This story shows how professional thieves live and how they treat each other.

"One Hundred Years in the White House," opening the September Ladies' Home Journal, gives some highly interesting glimpses of the social life of the century, and of the home life of our presidents since the time the Adamses moved into the executive mansion as its first occupant, in November, 1800. The "Romances of Some Southern Homes," in the same issue, pictures the most notable historic mansions of the South, and recalls the incidents which made them famous—their brave men and beautiful women. Some new anecdotes attract further interest to the beloved Philip Brooks, as a man and as a preacher. They are characteristic, and exceedingly well told. Anticipating the rather radical change that fashion has decreed in women's attire, ten special articles are devoted to the fall and winter modes. The pictorial features of the September Journal include a page drawing of "Loiterers at the Railroad Station," as A. B. Frost sees them; "The Wonders of California Gardens," and the beauties of Yellowstone Park. There are numerous practical articles and much else that is helpful in the department. RAPIDLY DEVELOPING NORTHERN WISCONSIN.

The settler and manufacturer who have located in the northern portion of the Badger State, are developing and improving that immense tract of rich country very rapidly. Tillers of the soil are coming in and new factories are going up. There is reason for this. The quality and quantity of iron ore, clay, kaolin, marl and timber lands tell the secret. Nature yields its riches to those who toil. Opportunities are still plentiful, for much of the rich undeveloped land is awaiting the settler and manufacturer. It can be obtained on easy terms and at low figures.

The court house at Kingsfisher, O. T., and several adjoining buildings were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $50,000. All of the court house records, except those of the county treasurer and such of the county clerk's and district clerk's as were in a fireproof vault were destroyed.

At Put-in-Bay a man named H. Metzger of Cleveland attempted to drown himself because of a quarrel with a girl who had accompanied him on the boat to the island. He leaped into the lake, and for half an hour fought three men who were trying to rescue him. He was finally saved.

Altha A. Hittenton of Uniontown, Pa., lost his life through trying to save Samuel Trimble of Pittsburgh from drowning in the Monongahela river. Young Hittenton swam to the drowning man, the latter clutched him about the body in a desperate manner and the two friends went down together.

Letters found among the papers of Gen. Hearst, who was recently assassinated at Manila, reveal that a plot had been formed to capture the city. Several dates, running from January to June, were set for the execution of the attack, but the conspirators were forced to countermand the orders for each instance.

Seven hundred persons attended the harvest home festival at Griggstown, N. J., to celebrate the successful gathering of the year's crops. Two hours after the festival began fifty persons in attendance were stricken with serious illness from something they had eaten and had to be conveyed to their homes.

At Elmira, N. Y., four inmates of the reformatory, working on the lawn in front of the institution, made a dash for liberty. A guard on duty fired a shot at the fugitives, and the bullet hit Henry Wheeler, who was passing the institution. The wound is not serious. The convicts were caught.

Attention is just now centering on Hastings creek, eight miles east of Nome. There prospectors have uncovered a gravel bed fifteen feet in thickness and of unknown breadth, extending for a mile and a half up into the hills. Wherever prospectors have gone it has been found to carry gold in paying quantities.

Margaret Minnahan, a nun, committed suicide by jumping from the French liner L'Aquitaine, on which she was a passenger, when the ship was 1,200 miles east of Sandy Hook. Miss Minnahan had been a nun, but her love for a young man caused her to leave the convent, and she felt she had disgraced her family.

Miss Zellinska, 18 years old, daughter of Jacob Zellinska, living six miles from Ashton, Neb., was shot through the heart by John Schrahl, her lover. She was out picking plums. Schrahl was hunting in the bushes and, without waiting to find out what it was, fired, killing the girl.

MOB RULE IN AKRON.

ATTEMPT TO LYNCH A NEGRO IN AN OHIO TOWN.

Lockup, County Jail and City Building, Successively Stormed by the Crowd—Scenes of Riot and Bloodshed in Which Two Persons Are Killed.

A mob of several thousand, frenzied persons in Akron, Ohio, infuriated over an assault upon the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Mann by Louis Peck, a colored man, searched the city prison, the county jail and the old court house for the negro, engaged in a battle of bullets with officers of the law, set fire to Columbia Hall, adjoining the city building, and threatened to destroy the latter structure.

Peck was arrested Wednesday and rumors of gathering trouble caused the police to transfer the prisoner to the county jail. The report that he had confessed spread rapidly and the mob gathered soon after dark.

It was about 8:30 o'clock when the mob surged down the street to the city prison. With a shout from the leaders the doors were battered down and a rush made for the prisoner. The officers offered no resistance and to satisfy the mob that Peck had been removed placed a committee in a search of the cells and building.

The search was fruitless and with a yell, "Now for the county jail, give us the nigger and we will deal with him!" a rush was made for the latter building and it was soon in the hands of the frenzied crowd. After a thorough search of the private apartments the mob started to batter down the big iron doors. Deputy Sheriff Stone mounted a chair in front of the prison doors and implored the crowd to disperse, giving his word that Peck was not within. He offered to allow a committee to make a search from top to bottom, and this satisfied the crowd that the negro had been smuggled away.

Then the mob rushed across the street and forced open the doors of the county court house. The building was soon packed and all rooms searched except those of the treasury department. A start was made to tear off the iron doors of the latter department, but this was soon abandoned and the mob rushed back to the city prison, crying for the blood of Peck.

Hundreds forced their way into the jail for the second time, insisting that the negro was there somewhere.

Mayor W. E. Young hastened to the building, and mounting the steps called upon the crowd to disperse, pledging his word that the prisoner had been escorted out of town. Cries of indignation greeted the executive's announcement and he was denounced on all sides for allowing the colored man to escape the clutches of the mob.

At 10 o'clock the mob began to attack the city prison for the third time. In the excitement someone fired a shot, which was followed by a fusillade. The officers in the building appeared at the windows and began to shoot over the heads of the people. A man armed with a shotgun leveled his weapon at the officers and they were soon made the target for the mob's fire. An indescribable scene followed. Several of the policemen fell wounded, others were struck by bricks and other missiles hurled by the mob and the return fire of the law's officers wrought havoc in the ranks of the mob. It is certain that thirty or forty persons were wounded in the melee and two are known to be dead.

Following the shooting, Columbia Hall was set on fire and within a short time the building was in flames. This building adjoined the city prison and the flames were soon communicated to the jail. Not content with firing the buildings, the mob determined to prevent the firemen from attempting to stay the progress of the flames. The hose was cut at every opportunity and one fireman was shot.

CONGR INDIOTS CHINA.

Says Imperial Cavalry Bombarded the Legations.

A long dispatch from Minister Conger was received at the State Department in Washington Monday night giving a detailed report of the condition of affairs in Peking since June 20. Mr. Conger said that a few days after the fall of Taku forts the Tsung-li-Yamen broke off communication with the foreign ministers and gave orders that the diplomats leave the city. Believing that to do this meant certain massacre, Mr. Conger goes on to state that the ministers refused to vacate, thereupon the imperial government ordered the imperial forces to attack in force the legations.

He says that failing to take the legations by infantry attack the Chinese troops brought artillery into play, and for over three weeks the legations were subjected to continued heavy bombardment. The Peking Imperial army made repeated and determined attacks and attempted to carry the legation defenses and it was only through the gallant and heroic stand of the marine guards that the Chinese failed to capture the legations. The portion of the message outlined above was suppressed by the department.

The Government has been anxiously waiting to hear from Mr. Conger and, while the revelation he makes is startling, the officials were prepared for just what they got. Mr. Conger's statement that the Chinese made a desperate attempt to exterminate the foreigners the night before the relief army arrived indicates that the Chinese know the foreign army would take the city in a few hours and that they wanted to destroy all evidence of their duplicity by killing the foreigners. As the imperial government directed the attacks on the legation which constituted a declaration of war, it is said that no peace overtures will be accepted which do not embody a complete surrender.

WAR HEROES GATHER

THOUSANDS ATTEND THE G. A. R. CONCLAVE.

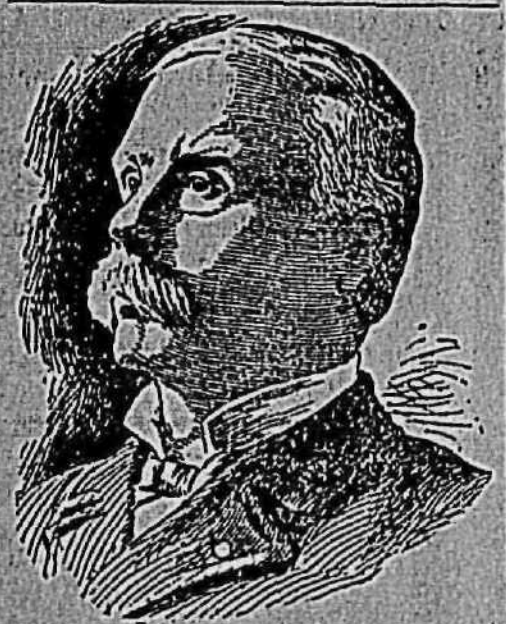

Reveille Opens the Thirty-fourth Grand Encampment of the Civil War Veterans—Chicago Through by Visiting Thousands.

Chicago Correspondence.

Survivors of the Federal army of '61-'65 made their bivouacs in Chicago Sunday to open Monday what the grand encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. While the veterans, cheered by the music of their fife and drums, marched from the depots, the churches enlivened their deeds in song and sermon, and the Avenue of Fame and the Court of Honor hung them welcome.

An army, grand but without guns, glorified but grizzled and decrepit, stormed Chicago, looted the treasure houses of its hospitality, plundered its pleasures and sacked the city day and night while every citizen looked on approvingly and cried, "Welcome!" and "Well done!" The scouts had been coming for a week, the skirmish line came Saturday, the advance guard fell upon the city Sunday and all Sunday night the main army, 30,000 strong, was rushing forward. Twenty thousand old men who knew about weather and war overran the streets and parks Sunday. Dressed in army blue, with badges splendid only in their significance, the old soldiers waded ankle deep in pools of rain, bared their heads before the heroic figures of Lincoln, Grant and Logan and "went a-visiting" and "a-toragins" till the torrents which deluged the streets had soaked and be-draggled them into condition for a camp fire and a bout with the canten.

Blue legions from every plain and mountain side marched through the streets to beat of drum and shriek of fife,

they encamped in the school houses, the parks and the hotels and settled down to enjoy the prerogatives of victorious arms. It was about the biggest thing in the way of a soldiers' reunion that ever took place on this planet.

On counts made at the depots, Chairman J. J. Tobias of the bureau of information estimated the number of arrivals for Sunday up to midnight to be 90,000, of which 18,000 were veterans. Ten thousand people were assigned to private houses by Chairman J. A. McCartney of the lodging house committee, and 21,000 were given free quarters in the school buildings by Capt. R. H. Peters, chairman of the free quarters committee. By Monday night the number of veterans and other visitors had increased to 250,000.

The gathering of the veterans of the civil war began with fitting Sunday services in the churches and culminated at night in a great religious and patriotic convocation at the new Coliseum. Its forerunner of the afternoon was the assemblage in the huge structure of the children of the Sunday schools to raise their youthful voices in songs of thanksgiving and national adoration. The weather was bad, but the two immense meetings were an inspiration for the coming week. The encampment was formally opened Monday morning. First a cannon on the lake front roared thirty times as a welcome to the sun. Then a few bearded figures wearing Grand Army uniforms began to appear on the streets and look around at the work Chicago had done to make them know how glad she was to entertain them. A band played "Marching Through Georgia" and a lot of Ohio veterans marched up from the union depot behind it just as if they were following old "Pop" Sherman to the sea. By the time the sun had put some gold into the red, white and blue streets the sidewalks were full. Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana and Iowa seemed to have sent all their soldiers of the rebellion.

From Maine to California.

Posts arrived from Nebraska, North Dakota, Alabama, Louisiana, Iowa, South Dakota, Nevada, California, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota and points in Illinois during the early morning. Aside from the posts there were unattached veterans from nearly all of the other Western States.

COURT OF HONOR FOR THE GRAND ARMY.

From Maine there were hundreds, from California there were hundreds, and from the States between there were hundreds likewise. More bands played. A big fife corps of fifty pieces, went down State street leading eight bent Iowa veterans trudging along under the flags as martial as if they were an army corps.

It wasn't a great while until the cable car gongs and the clunk of truck wheels lost themselves in a melody of "The Star-Spangled Banner," "John Brown's Body" and the rhythmic tramp of marching posts. Little eddies of blue ran through the crowds, whirling here and there when a man from Illinois met a Nebraskan beside whom he fought at Shiloh or elsewhere.

Above them all "Old Glory" snapped and fluttered from a thousand windows and roofs, proud with them, exultant with them, and not forgetting their greater triumphs in the luster of later deeds done under its folds.

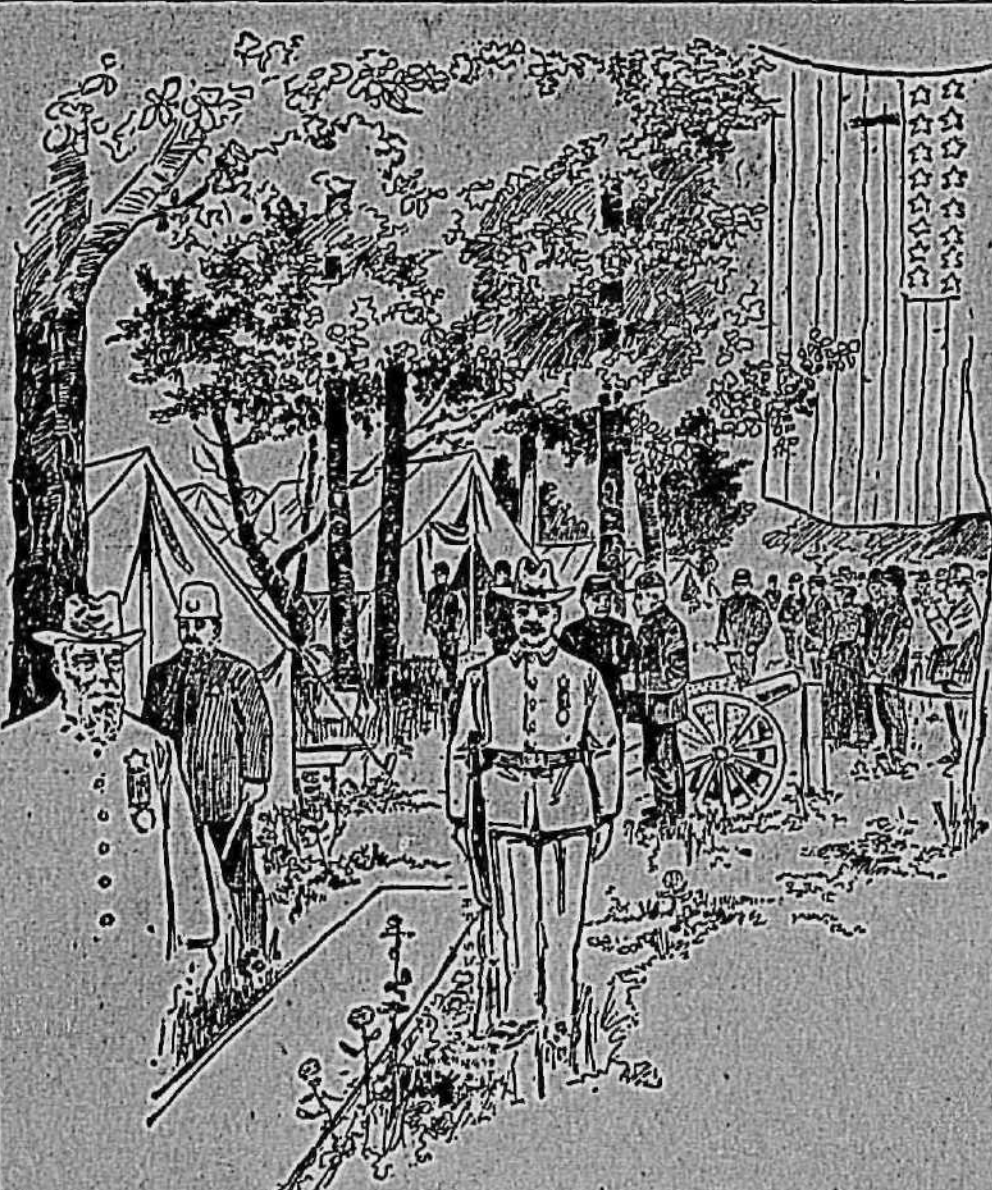

There wasn't a flagstaff in the city of Chicago that didn't bear a flag. State street was canopied with a tricolor sky, clouds of red, white and blue floated over all the cross and parallel thoroughfares, and there were banners and portraits and corps badges of heroic size swinging from wires every few feet. Business houses generally were swathed in the colors of the nation. Designs in bunting and in incandescent lights covered the fronts of buildings and from the skyscrapers' windows hung myriads of flags and patriotic emblems.

Monday the crowds surged toward Michigan avenue, where the white Court of Honor glistened like an avenue of ivory. Down its long stretch they walked—between the rows of snowy flag-capped pillars—from the arch of the army to the arch of the navy. At times during the day the court became so crowded with people that it was difficult to move within its boundaries. The Avenue of Fame, too, drew thousands of spectators to look upon the portraits of the commanders who led the boys of '61 to victory.

OLD SALTS IN LINE.

Great Parade of the Naval Veterans of the Civil War.

'Mid lines of cheering thousands, under emblematic arches and fluttering ensigns of Stars and Stripes, the navy veterans of the '60s marched in Chicago Monday with escorts of honor, in their last great martial pageant of the waning century, across the years of which they have em-bazoned so glorious a record. Escorting the deep-water warriors of past days were the seamen who fought at Manila Bay and Sanlago, while the boys of the

Oh, it was foul it was glory! CHORUS.
Hip! Hip! Hurrah! for navy and army, too.

Ha, Ha! Ya, Ya! we'll stand by the boys in blue, We love to shout their victories, and shout McKinley, too.

We'll stand by him in November.

Bryan sees McKinley standing in the White House door, Looking happy, duty done, watching the eagle soar, "Sixteen to one"—he'll spike that gun-free silver dump on shore.

Slak Bryan and his crew up Salt river. CHORUS.
Hip! Hip! Hurrah! O, let the eagle soar! Ya, Ya! bah, bah! we're tired of Bryan's roar.

In Orient and Occident, we'll fix things up without consent, Our motto is humanity and freedom.

Illinois, so brave and true, is always front and fore, Always found defiant where there's shot and shell galore.

She has no use for Bryan—nor for any running sore. His grave she will dig in November.

CHORUS.
Hip! Hip! Hurrah! for Illinois once more, Ha, Ha! Ya, Ya! Alschuler she will floor, Richard Yates make governor, as was his sire before.

Yates, he is true, just and loyal.

FACTS THAT ARE FACTS.

Values of Live Stock in Illinois in 1890 and 1900.

Do you live in Illinois, and do you live on a farm? If so, just look at this statement of the comparative values of live stock between 1890, when McKinley was elected, and in 1900, when it is your duty and interest to re-elect him:

Value. Value.
Jan. 1, 1890. Jan. 1, 1900.

Horses $34,502,950 $48,480,673
Mules 3,531,725 4,245,058
Milch cows 27,000,445 37,070,867
Other cattle 20,294,530 41,107,518
Sheep 1,670,057 2,532,283

Total $86,880,343 $133,533,000
Increase, $30,640,757.

Are you a merchant in a county seat or in a village of Illinois? If so, remember that as the value of farm stock and produce rises or falls, so also do your cash receipts from the farmers who are your customers.

Are you a mechanic or a laborer? If so, bear in mind that when the retailer makes large sales the manufacturer has to make many goods to supply the retailer's needs. And when the factories are busy, labor is in great demand, and when labor is in great demand wages go up.

Farmer or merchant, mechanic or laborer, lawyer or banker, do not let your attention be diverted by any specious plea from consideration of the main fact that during the last forty years we have had "good times" when Republican policy prevailed and bad times when Democratic policy was in the ascendant.

Declares for McKinley.

One of the most prominent of the Southern Illinois Democrats to announce themselves for McKinley and Yates as against Bryanism is G. Van Hoorbeke, the widely known attorney of Carlyle. Mr. Van Hoorbeke was United States district attorney under President Cleveland in his last term, from 1892 to 1896, and has held many other prominent political positions in his section of the State, including those of State's attorney for Clinton County, Mayor, City Attorney and Treasurer of Carlyle, his home town, and others of similar weight. He has also been prominently mentioned in the past for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the present Twenty-first, formerly the old Eighteenth, or Morrison, district. As an attorney he has ever stood high and has been of counsel in many important cases involving large interests. Mr. Van Hoorbeke's statement of his reasons for his determination to vote for McKinley the coming election is most valuable and interesting.

Illinois Is Republican.

Judge Yates, Republican candidate for Governor, has returned from a trip which has taken him through the western and central portions of the State and among the German communities, where defections, he thinks, would be noticed if anywhere. "Illinois will go Republican this year by 100,000, unless the information we get is phenomenally inaccurate," said Judge Yates. "As for the State being safe, it is unbelievable that we can be in any danger. The Legislature is safe, too, as we will have that if we carry the State by 30,000. We went everywhere and talked with everybody on railroad trains, at stations, in shops and stores and in hotels. We heard the same story everywhere, corroborating the reports we have been receiving at State headquarters. I am apprehensive that the reports are too good to be true. We shall win by an overwhelming majority, unless we have been subjected to astonishing inaccuracies."

Show Republican Gains.

Republican leaders at Carbondale asserted that there will be a substantial gain in that city over the vote of 1890, and in support of this point to five prominent citizens who voted for Bryan in 1890 who this year are for McKinley. The following names are mentioned: J. W. Hanford, a former traveling man and at present one of our most energetic merchants; Judge W. P. Lightfoot, the present police magistrate of this city; Edward K. Potter, a prominent druggist and an old schoolmate of Bryan; Charles Thomas, a blacksmith of the city; and Capt. John W. Toler, postmaster of this city during Cleveland's administration. In the country surrounding the gains to McKinley are much greater than those in the city. The McKinley-Yates Club has an active membership of 185.

Old Friends Desert Bryan.

In no county in the State have the desertions from Democracy been more numerous than in Marion County, the birthplace and old home of Bryan. Old-time Democrats are going back on him at a very alarming rate.

Among the prominent leaders in Marion County who have renounced Bryan and come out openly for McKinley and Yates are J. L. James, for years superintendent of the county home; O. A. James, George Thibbs, J. T. Davis, Henry Vursells and four sons, all voters; George Huechen, John J. Hopkins, former Democratic supervisor, and R. S. Hopkins, all of Salem; E. H. Boyd and three voting sons of Kimmunity, and O. E. Minor of Omega; Thomas M. Smith, an old personal friend of Bryan.

What the People Want to Know.

Will Candidate Alschuler tell the people of Illinois what the Democratic party will do in regard to the money question and the tariff question in case of Bryan's election? These are direct practical issues having to do with the present. Mr. Alschuler and his associates are talking about a subject 8,000 miles away, the Philippines, and not about subjects that concern personally and directly the American people. Will Mr. Bryan upset the monetary system of our country? Will he strive to have the tariff measure repealed? These are things that touch people at home and every day. Why does Mr. Alschuler avoid them and touch on issues that have no real existence.

Democratic Centenary Changes.

Daniel Crabtree, who resides in Weber township, six miles east of Mount Vernon, is undoubtedly the oldest man in Jefferson County, having been born in 1801. If he lives till next February Mr. Crabtree will round out a century of existence. He is remarkably well preserved for one of his great age, possessing to an astonishing degree all his physical and mental faculties. Mr. Crabtree bids fair to celebrate his hundredth birthday anniversary. Although a former Democrat, he says he will vote for McKinley, Roosevelt and Yates if he lives till next November.

Hon. James M. Latta Bolts.

The Democrats of Menard County have lost one of their leading statesmen in the person of Hon. James M. Latta, of Athens, Democratic member of the Fortieth General Assembly, who has announced himself for McKinley, Yates and the entire Republican ticket.

Mr. Latta went to Springfield especially to inform Hon. David Ross, Republican nominee for Congress in the Seventeenth District, of his renunciation of the party with which he was affiliated and his determination to support the Republican ticket from top to bottom.

Overwhelmingly Republican.

Judge Longenecker of Chicago, department commander of the Illinois G. A. R., while on his way to Mattoon, took a straw vote on the train, which resulted: McKinley, 100; Bryan, 0; non-committal, 17. Judge Longenecker says he finds the same overwhelming sentiment for McKinley and good times wherever he goes and there is no doubt as to the glorious victory for the Republican party this fall.

Gags at Kansas City Platform.

William Bourner, aged 83, a wealthy land owner of Seminary township, Fayette County, and a life-long Democrat, has renounced Bryan and come out squarely for McKinley, Yates and expansion. Mr. Bourner says he cannot swallow the Kansas City platform. He says he will not only vote for McKinley, but will use his influence to persuade others to do likewise.

Sentiment in the East.

Former Sheriff James McNamara of Freeport, who for years has been accounted one of the most prominent Democrats in Stephenson County, announces that he will vote for McKinley and Yates and that the Republican ticket will poll a larger vote in his county this year than in 1896.

Alschuler's Millstone.

In addition to his personal qualifications, Richard Yates has, in this campaign, the prestige of forty years of efficient Republican rule in Illinois. On the other hand, Mr. Alschuler has a millstone tied to his neck in the form of four years of Democratic misrule and maladministration.

Canton's Great Club.

The Yates Veterans Club at Canton now includes 101 members. Its officers were all delegates to the Decatur convention of May 9, 1890, which nominated Richard Yates for Governor of Illinois. The qualification for membership in the club is having voted for the great war Governor.

Populists Are Scarce.

The Populists of Illinois seem to have completely winked out. The influence of the party was never of any moment except to give the Democratic managers an excuse to desert Democratic principles for new and worse ones.

candidates were in the field for the position of Coroner, Dr. Jamison, of Millburn; Dr. Shafer, of Grayslake; Dr. Taylor, of Libertyville; Dr. In-were taken and Dr. Taylor having received a majority of all the votes cast was, on motion, made the unanimous nominee of the convention. For the office of County Surveyor there were two aspirants, James Anderson, Jr., the present incumbent, and H. L.

Bowen, city engineer of Waukegan.
The first ballot gave Mr. Anderson a majority, and on motion, he was made the unanimous nominee of the con-adjourned without any speech-making or other talk, having been in session about thirty minutes. The ticket nominated is a good one and will command the hearty and united support of all republicans in the county.

Treason.

"Every person owing allegiance to the United States who levies war against them or adheres to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason. Every person guilty of treason shall suffer death."

This has been the law of the United States for 110 years, and is the law today.
Under other clauses of the same law "Every person who incites" or "assists any insurrection," or "who carries on any correspondence with any foreign government with intent to defeat the measures of the United States," is liable to heavy fine and long imprisonment. "If two or more persons conspire by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States" each is liable to similar penalties.

The letter of Dr. Montague B. Leveson, of Fort Hamilton, N. Y., to G. Apacible, found among the rebel archives in Luzon and published, certainly gives "aid and comfort" to the enemies of the United States. Edward Atkinson, George S. Boutwell, Carl Schurz, Edwin Burritt Smith, J. Laurence Laughlin, A. H. Tolman, and several others of their kind, if the government chose to notice them, could certainly be sent to prison for assisting an insurrection. The facts as to the acts and words of these men are notorious and the law is plain. Every reader can apply the law to the facts.

Whenever the word "treason" is applied to the utterances of Mr. Bryan's supporters democratic newspapers make frantic appeals to "the right of free speech." But here is the law and here are the facts.
Neither can be changed by boastful defiance of the government to prosecute the guilty.
The United States is merciful, but its mercy does not absolve the traitors morally or acquit them before the bar of public opinion.
